"For this desk I borrowed elements of a classic Chinese table and added a modern flair. I have seen this done with great success, most notably by Hans Wegner, in his "Chinese Chair." The joint at each corner of the frame is a three-way miter - a joint rarely found outside of Chinese furniture because of the time and precision required to make it strong and tight fitting. I forged the drawer pull from one piece of steel, hammering red-hot material to a shape that complements the gentle curves in the frame and aprons of the desk."
